They imply that a nation is losting or has lost its youthful truth and rigentous—nees, and its fast lapsing into a condition of luxurious mockery and form. History is filled with agnificant warnings against this unseemly extravagance. Tactius drew a brief and pregnant rebulke of Roman luxury and magnificence, in this respect, from the wholesome simplicity of the German, and both Pliny and Plutarch have attested the excessive formal eplendor that showe forth in Rome's decadency, as if lighting her mournfully to ruin. Indeed, the Eternal City may be said almost to have marched to her downfall by the blazing torchee of ber coxtly funeral processions. have marched to her downfall by the blazmig beautiful than the following: torches of ber costly funeral processions fact is unquestionable. We are already in some tr the scandal instead of the model of the world. But we still have faith in the sterling sense and cherished instincts of the people. Under God, our national salvation lier to those bright and exalted impulser, and in the thorough development of our spiritual as the complement and crown of our material and inctual natures. Among all the false usages and customs of our country none outrages these Palladian instincts more harsbly than the we have just condemned. And we invoke the achers of the land, and the influenral laymen of their churches, to unite with enand trampling upon the superfluous, vile show. erming, patriotic citizens everywhere should condemn and proscribe it, for their own sakes, and for the sake of the future of their country. It is a reproach and tarnish upon our civili tion, and should be proudly spurned as unworthy of an earnest and rational people, struggling gracefully toward a lofter and juster culture. We are no admerers of aumptuary laws statute book, but there is an unwritten sumpti ary law in the bosom of every true man and woman which we do admire heartily, and to which we gladly refer this flaunting offense fo reproof and correction.

The editor of the Democrat has too much And it is hardly a figure of speech to say that the graves of all bursed nations gleam with fear-ful lessons upon the perils of this most ridiculates and pompous custom.

The following lines were negated by reading a description are supported and the shaped it is a section of this most ridiculated and pompous custom.

It is a melancholy thing that our nation should display so many signs of weakness and decline in the very morning of its career, and yet the in the very morning of its career, and yet the state of the stat ed is precisely the same; the means differ. The reasons and the motives are the same; and certainly one of the means used to accomplish the end is as good as the other. The assumption of the Democrat, that, if it would be an outrage for the constitution of a State to render men of a particular class ineligible to office, it must necessarily be a second for $5. State to render men of a particular class ineligible to office, it must necessarily be an outrage for citizens voluntarily to agree together not to give their own votes in favor of such men, is as monstrous an absurdity as ever came through the cracks and zig-zags of a good-for-nothing head. It amounts simply to this—that, If it would be wrong for the organic law of the land to shot out a particular individual from office, it must necessarily be a sin for me, in the exercise of the high privileges of the elective franchise, to decline voting for that individual. The Democrat, in this attempt, as in all others, to convict us of inconsistency, convicts itself of folly that
